Here we will take a look at the roles of teachers and students during each item, as well as some activities for each, as well as compare the traditional reading group with a dynamic guided reading group. This is when the teacher presents the text and takes the opportunity to teach the students before the start of the reading. Teacher Role: Choose an appropriate text for the group. Prepare an introduction to the story they will read. Briefly present the story to the students. To leave some unanswered questions that can be answered throughout the story. Student Role: Engage in a conversation with the group about the story. Ask questions about the story to be read. Create expectations for the text. To notice the information contained in the text. Activity to try: Sort words. Choose a few words from the text that can be difficult for students or words that tell what the story is. Then, let the students sort the words into categories. During this period when students read, the teacher provides all necessary assistance, as well as recordings of all observations. Teacher Role: Listen to students as they read. Observe each reader's behavior for strategy use. Interact with students and help them if necessary. Observe and take notes on individual learners. Student Role: Read the text to itself quietly or gently. To ask for help if necessary. Activity to try: Sticky notes. During reading, students write whatever they want on sticky notes. It can be something that interests them, a word that confuses them, or a question or comment they may have, anything at all. Then share them as a group after reading the story. After reading the teacher talks with the students about what they have just read and the strategies they have used, and leads the students through a discussion about the book. Teacher Role: Talk and discuss what has just been read. students to respond or add details. Return to the text for teaching opportunities such as finding answers to questions. Assess students' understanding. Extend the text by offering activities such as writing or drawing. Student Role: Talk about what they have just read. Check the predictions and react to the story. Review the text to answer the teacher's questions. Read Again with partner or group. Engage in other activities to expand the learning of history. Activity to try: Draw a history map. After reading, ask students to draw a map of the stories of what the story was. Here we will take a look at the traditional reading groups compared to dynamic guided reading groups. Here's how they compare: Traditional groups focus on the lesson, not the student — while guided reading focuses on the student, not the lesson that will actually help the student learn and understand the lesson plan more quickly. The traditional is grouped by the general determination of capacity — while guided is grouped by a specific assessment of the forces and appropriate level of the text. Traditional groups the teacher follows a prepared script - while in guided the teacher is actively engaged with the text and students. Traditional reading groups focus on decoding words — while guided reading groups focus on understanding meaning. In traditional reading groups, words are taught and skills are practiced in workbooks — whereas in a guided reading group, the teacher builds meaning and language and skills are incorporated into reading, not workbooks. Traditional reading groups students are tested on their skills — while in dynamic guided reading groups, student evaluation is continuous and throughout teaching. Why buy? Parents give this book 4.5/5 stars, and teachers love it too. The book is very systematic. Five questions follow each reading passage, so if your child doesn't want to do a bunch of different activities, then this will be the right ticket for him. Summer reading is a great way to maintain fluidity and reading level. The right book can also encourage independent reading. But find the elusive book that teenager or your students may appreciate it being tricky. While many teachers rely on the classics when choosing books, there are many contemporary ya titles that are perfect for the classroom. The use of ya contemporary novels can also help foster a love of reading among teenagers who may have trouble relating to more adult themes and outdated language in some classics. Many teachers have begun to incorporate novels for the age level of their pupils lessons to great success. When awarding the summer reading, it may be a good idea to allow students to choose from a list of different titles. This allows the student to have some control over his assignment and the opportunity to choose a book that really interests him. This is a sample of the titles that are often on high school reading lists for Grade 10 (or Grade 11). Regardless of your age or skills, the books on this list are excellent introductions to literature.
